Gynecologic Dermatology

A large number of females visit their primary care physician for vulvo-vaginal dermatoses. Most of these cutaneous eruptions are diagnosed as a fungal infection/candidiasis/STD and are prescribed treatment accordingly. Quite a few of these gynecologic skin eruptions are actually not related to candida or STD's. In this presentation, we will aim to show which some of the other most common clinical conditions are likely to be encountered and what are some diagnostic "pearls" when evaluating these disorders. Accurate assessment and prompt recognition of some of these cutaneous vulvo-vaginal eruptions will offer the practicing clinician with the ability to offer appropriate treatment according to the clinical condition and thus have final resolution and patient satisfaction.
