

Young Research Forum of International Conference on Public Health and Epidemiology.

Alireza Heidari*

President, AISI, USA

Accepted on March 16, 2020

Young Research Forum

International Conference on Public Health & Epidemiology will be held on June 17-18, 2020 at Edinburgh, Scotland. The theme of the conference is very timely as early intervention programs are increasingly being brought to scale all over the world. Conference topics will be diverse as usual, ranging from epidemics, to research on public health concerns, to implementation of solutions in real-life.

The conference is set to conduct the most awaited 'Young Researchers Forum' on the same dates of the conference. It is brought to you by the Organizing Committee of the Public Health 2020. The Young Researchers Forum offers young medical researchers the platform to bring their research to the global attention and to level up their career in research. It is a platform where they can learn from the experts directly, an opportunity to closely interact with eminences and to join their peers in the betterment of the future with elite collaborations. It is open for medical students, PhD candidates, fresh graduates and post graduates.

The theme of this meeting is 'Unveiling Recent Advancements in Healthcare' and the specialties hand-picked for discussion is Public Health, Epidemiology, Diabetes, Nutrition, and Medical Ethics.

Post-graduate students, post-doctoral fellows, trainees, interns, junior faculty and medical students are eligible to register for this forum. The candidate must be less than 33 years old and all the presentations of this forum will be in the official language of the conference which is English. The topic they choose for presentation must fall within any of the scientific sessions of the conference. These oral presentations need to be of 10 minutes duration in the related scientific track followed by 5 minutes Q&A. It is separately organized apart from the normal plenary and keynote lectures to provide a more personalized attention to the budding researchers and aspiring young entrepreneurs. It gives the young minds a glimpse of industry standards, interacts with peers and mentors and collaborates with interdisciplinary projects.

Candidates applying for the Young Researcher Award should submit a proof of their eligibility to participate in the YRF, and a letter of recommendation from a research adviser or a faculty member or the department HOD to publichealth@alliedgather.com followed by which they can go online and register for the same. They can begin by submitting an abstract at the abstract submission link on the website.

The young researchers are encouraged to step up and make use of this opportunity and get global attention for their work. The Public Health 2020 YRF candidates can compete for the Young Scientist's Award. The award will be a prestigious accomplishment to adorn your CV. The prize winning papers will be exclusively considered for publication in the Allied Academies Publishing Group public health journals once the paper is subjected to standard review procedures. A brochure can be downloaded from the website as a reminder to encourage you to begin thinking about submitting your abstracts. Feel free to distribute the flyer to your interested colleagues. We hope to see you at Edinburgh in June 2020!

*Correspondence to

Alireza Heidari

President, AISI, USA,

E-mail:alirezah2701@gmail.com